

ABSTRACT

A process for synthesizing a nucleic acid on a solid support involves a solid support made of a polymer, which carries a divalent hydrocarbon radical bonded to either an epoxide group or a glycol group, which glycol group has a hydroxy-substituted saturated carbon atom adjacent to a saturated carbon atom substituted with a nucleophilic group.